Day 4: Ankify - Diego-Suarez

250 km stage

This region, which was once a landlocked area, has always felt the call of the open sea.

Here lies one of the best assets of the destination Madagascar: the combination of a remarkable marine environment with a terrestrial environment and a often exceptional biodiversity.

Diego Suarez, a city steeped in history, where Yemenis, Somalis, Comorians, Arabs, Chinese, Indians, Pakistanis, and Europeans peacefully coexist with the Malagasy population, mainly Antakarana and Sakalava.

The colonial architecture is still very much present. From Place Joffre, where our day ends, we enjoy a breathtaking view of Madagascar's third largest port.

At this moment, Diego by Night begins with tasting skewers on the sidewalks. Numerous restaurants, bars, and nightclubs enliven the

Day 6: Diego Suarez - Ankify (250 km)

Today's stage covers approximately 250 km.

Along the way, we will encounter the "Red Tsingy", a natural wonder accessible through a not always practical path. These cathedrals, made of sandstone, marl, and limestone, are the result of erosion.

The spectacle of these pinkish-red Tsingy, erected at the bottom of a canyon, is simply magical.

Before continuing westward, we will drive through the Ankarana Reserve.

A very rich fauna may allow us to observe some lemur species such as Lemur Coronatus, Lemur Fulvus, Lepilemur, and Hapalemur.

Eroded by rain and water, the Tsingy form horizontal and vertical cracks, giving the impression of a huge pile of rocks, all amidst lush vegetation.
